Unending gratitude goes to my advisor at Cornell, Herbert Gottfried. He gave me the freedom and courage to begin, endure and complete this degree. He instilled in me a passion for the profession and exemplified the fruits of a curious and perspicacious mind. He learned to know me, challenging my ideals and respecting my course. His words will always be a source of strength.

I am also grateful to professor, Amaechi Okigbo. He helped my eyes to see and my hands to draw. He lifted me from my weariness with his contagious enthusiasm and remarkable expertise and saw potential I didn't know I had.

In this past semester I have greatly benefited from the instruction of Halprin Fellow, Jeremy Foster. He introduced me to a priceless library of relevant written sources as well as practical design methodologies. He inspired me with a class trip to Paris in the dead of winter.

I am grateful to Jamie Vanucchi and Paula Horrigan for the many rousing and informal discussions on nature and ecology.

In Rijeka, I would like to especially thank Mirna Karzan for her groundbreaking work on public space under the International Policy Fellowship, her lovely hospitality, and for her role as my primary contact in the city. I am also indebted to architect, Bojan Bilić of the Rijeka Bureau of Town Planning, for imparting professional data and personal anecdotes on a city he knows so well. Nataša Zrilić, of the mayor's office, was incredibly helpful and resourceful, taking time for me amid many high-profile obligations. At the Port Authority, Ivan Vukas, Tvrtko Tomijenić and Jadranka Paulin were also very hospitable and helpful, providing me with CAD drawings, a beautiful book on the history of the port, photographs of the coastline and various excursions. Michel Audige, of the World Bank in Washington, D.C., opened the door for me to study this project, and welcomed me to the launching meetings in Rijeka. Landscape architect, Vlasta Oreb, of Studio Perivoj, provided enthusiasm for my work, as well as friendship. In addition, the following people contributed significantly to my research and thinking on Rijeka: Shojiro Koga, of Nippon Koei Co, Pat Dusenbury, of The Urban Institute, George Husk, of Christian Initiatives for Development, Sandra Kolonić Bistričić of Ri-Center, Zoran of Korak Ispred, Deana Veljković, of the Mayor's Office, Maja, of the Bureau of Town Planning, Ksenija Linić, of the Mayor's Office, Ana Matačin and Davor Milaš, of Rijeka University, Iva and Momir Blažek, of the STEP program, Burnett, Ana and Maša, participants of ROM.

I would also like to acknowledge Emily Gunzburger, Cornell Ph.D. candidate in architectural history whose work in the post-war context of Bosnia Herzegovina provided for helpful discussions along the way. Her residency in Sarajevo was part of the reason I decided to make the trip. Classmate, Maša Hranjeć, instilled in me a curiosity for the Adriatic coast and the former Yugoslavia. Kristin Gosselin's travels to Croatia and research on tourism were helpful resources, and as always, her friendship led me in the way of adventure. Jo and Lin Fisher, Jon Ellison and Maureen Guenole provided friendship and diversion while I was researching in Cambridge, Mass.

For financial support, I am grateful to the Cornell Graduate School Fellowship office and the Department of Landscape Architecture.

I would also like to thank Patrick Glavče and PNG Logistics Co. for enjoining me in the interest of ports and international shipping and for exemplifying the positive fruits of capitalism.

Finally, my gratitude goes to my family. I look for the day I can give to them the way they have generously given to me.
